It was not necessary to be. He was not sure that even the engineers of the same dam would be able to arrive at an exact estimate. And upon this subject, by way of showing the large cost of works of this kind, he referred to the large dam at Warrington, Dehra, lately published work on India, in which the cost per acre of constructing these large dams, and the relative cost of the various methods of irrigation, were given. The PRESIDENT said he had been a member for that country in listening to him, and assured them that he had only made these observations because he did not like to let the discussion pass without some reference to the subject. He had experience, of which a new member might be able to make better use than he should.

MR. HOLY asked whether the water in the bottle had taken any of the water above or below the dam.

THE PRESIDENT said it had not come from the river, but from some spot near Emmore.

MR. HOLY pointed out that that was not near George's
